

Two mounds, about 20 yards apart in a ploughed field, formed of quarried stones, grown over with grass, then bushes &c.

They were pointed out as supposed burying places.

On examining them, I found that - One of them had apparently been examined and opened up,
as on the top there

My dear Herbert -

If you can spare the time kindly give me your opinion on the following Archaeological matters.

At Balgreggan I found among the Sand Hills (where the flint arrow heads have been discovered) a small water worn heart shaped

Dear Sir,

June 8th, 1898.

In reply to your letter of the 7th inst., Can you give or obtain for me any authoritative information upon the following two points.

1st. What is the nearest distance to which any of the three lines you speak of will run to Stonehenge. This affects the question whether the trains could shake the ground on which the stones stand.

2nd. What is the distance of the nearest station. This affects the question of the accession of visitors. I do not think there will be any accession of visitors that cannot be met by the posting of one or if necessary two extra policemen or an army pensioner if desirable. The visitors could not overturn the stones if they wished to do so; and as to the chippings I doubt whether even now that is carried on to any extent.

The owner, Sir Edmund Antrobus, is of no use. He will not listen to any representation that is made to him on the subject, and the existing Act of Parliament cannot deal with the matter in any way.

If you can give me any reliable information upon these points it would be of use. Hitherto I have not been able to obtain any authoritative information on the subject, and I am not certain whether the points have even been settled as yet.

Yours truly,

A. Pitt-Rivers.

of the mound and the m<sup>o</sup> already opened in the centre.

The mounds vary in size
The largest about 30 by 20 yards and 4 yds high.

With love to Mary.

Yours affectionately were very large slabs of stone lying about - and found in some of them stuck

in an upright position
so as to form a tomb, apparently - One of the mounds had been partially removed by the tenant for making roads - This was stopped some years ago -

On examining the park quarried I noticed

two large slabs underneath the mass of loose stones -
at right angles to each other, apparently forming a tomb such as had already been opened up.
& which I have referred to. I will be visiting this neighborhood in about a fortnight & have given directions to have this tomb opened when there.

Can you throw any light on these mounds? What are they? If burying places, did the inhabitants simply add to the heap as they died or are they burying places for one privileged party? It seems as if they were for many, as my tomb which I intend opening is on the edge
