Dear General Pitt-Rivers

I send you a newspaper report of the visit of the B. & G. Stort-Arch^d Socy to the Roman Villa at Tockington Park - I don't know when the pavements will be covered over:
that depends chiefly
on the weather, &c,

which will compel the tenant after a while to bring in his cattle.

Mr John would be delighted to be your guide if you could come over &
visit the villa.

My house is
full just at present:
so that I cannot
ask you to make it
your headquarters, as

I would have liked to have done -

Believe me

Yours sincerely
John Beddoe

BRISTOL AND GLOUCESTERSHIRE ARCHAEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

A special all-day meeting of this society was held yesterday, when a highly-interesting programme was arranged for by one of the local secretaries, Mr. G. W. Keeling. The rendezvous was at Tytherington Railway station, and amongst those present, beside a large number of ladies, were Sir John Maclean, Major-General Vizard, Mr. P. D. Prankerdy, Mr. A. C. Wheeler, Mr. T. T. Tuckett, Col. Blathwayt, Mr. A. E. Smith, Mr. T. C. Dolman, Mr. Sherwood Smith, Rev. Ellis Viney, Mr. G. D. Crossman, Mr. W. Margotson, Rev. E. J. Bower, Mr. T. Ronso, Mr. W. C. Heane, Rev. S. E. Bartlett, Mr. W. Leigh, Rev. D. Lee-Pitcairn, Mr. T. Harding, Dr. Cook, Mr. J. Latimer, Mr. F. Sturge, Rev. J. Poynton, Mr. Goodenough Taylor, Rev. J. E. Vernon, Mr. W. H. Harford, Mr. E. P. Little, Mr. W. George, Mr. J. Bush, Mr. J. C. Walker, Mr. V. R. Perkins, Mr. A. E. Hudd, Mr. W. C. Grist, Mr. H. W. Braton, Mr. F. Judge, Mr. G. B. Keeling, Rev. M. M. Lamb, Mr. Dunscombe, Dr. Burder, Mr. C. P. Pritchett, Mr. J. B. C. Burroughs, Mr. C. J. Trustad, Rev. W. H. S. Davies, Mr. R. A. Woodman, Mr. S. H. Swayne, Mr. J. G. Swayne, Mr. B. Matthews, Rev. Bagnal-Oakley, Mr. T. S. Bush, Mr. E. P. Loftus Brock, Mr. J. Baker, Mr. Banks, Mr. G. P. Witta, Mr. H. Eager, Mr. E. Hartland, Mr. Reed, Rev. Fox, Mr. D. W. Keeling, Dr. Beddoe, and Mr. G. T. W. Keeling.

On arriving at Tytherington the members ascended the hill to the left of the railway, and inspected the Roman camp, particulars of which were supplied by Mr. G. F. Witt, who expressed the opinion that it originally formed one of a line of camps extending from the Aust passage to the Wash. In area the camp was about five acres, and in the past it had played an important part in the history of the country. Nothing striking in the shape of remains had been found there, but the remains of a Roman villa had been discovered in the neighbourhood, and he had no doubt that if proper excavations were effected other interesting discoveries would be made. The party drove to Alveston, and inspected the ancient church, which is now used simply as a mortuary chapel, a new and handsome edifice having been provided for the parish. The features of the building were described by Sir John Maclean, who said it was of the Norman transition date. Its irregular white-washed walls and cross-beams, and high straight-backed pews—one of which was labelled "For females only"—gave to the building a very crude appearance. It was explained that the remains of a plaster floor had been discovered underneath the chancel. The adjacent...

generally the pavement is broken up, and the tesserae are mixed with the soil. We have not found any wall terminating this chamber at the east end, and the walls at the sides bounding the pavement are to a great extent destroyed. It might have been much longer. About two-thirds along the length of the existing pavement, on the south side, five rough stones are set in a radiating manner, forming an irregular circle, as if intended to support something without damaging the pavement. About twenty-five or thirty feet from this pavement was found the flat carved stone already mentioned. I believe good results would be found by further excavations—when the snow is removed—of the ground on that spot, and also of the ground in the rickyard on the north side of the corridor, and of that lying between the present excavations by the pond and the dwelling-house. In conclusion, Sir John, in the name of the society, tendered its hearty and grateful thanks to the lord of the manor (the Rev. J. L. Peach); to Mr. George Crossman, the agent; to Miss Crossman, for her really splendid drawings of some of the pavements; to Mr. Judge, of her Majesty's Office of Works, for his excellent plans and drawings; to Mr. George Pailin, the bailiff of the estate, who had rendered ready help; and last, but by no means least, to Mr. Richard Smith, the intelligent tenant farmer, for the great interest he had taken in the discovery and the readiness with which he had submitted to the inconvenience occasioned by the disturbance of his farm yard, and also for the careful and efficient manner in which in his (Sir John's) absence he superintended the men in the work of excavation (applause). He cordially invited any of the gentlemen present who took an interest in the discovery, to offer a few remarks.

The Rev. Preb. SCARTH (Wrighton) said he visited the site on the occasion alluded to by Sir John. He was at once convinced that a great and valuable find had been made, and that the opening up of the ground at various points would produce great results. He had not been there since, and he thought more had been realised than he had a right to expect. A great deal had been done, and in an able, masterly way. He had had something to do with the excavations of Roman villas and towns, and he could say that a great deal of judgment had been shown, and he trusted that the search would be further prosecuted, when he believed that great results would follow (hear, hear). Speaking of the recent discovery of a Roman villa at Yatton, he bore high testimony to the liberality of the lord of the manor, Mr. Pigott, who had borne the whole of the expense of the excavation and the means adopted for the preservation of the remains. A large find of 800 Roman coins had been discovered there...

...the wall of the villa was not so entirely unknown as we had at first supposed; and in the course of our operations it was brought under my notice that a pavement in the farmyard and foundations had been discovered just a century ago. It is mentioned in Seyer's "History of Bristol" (Vol. I., cap. 2, p. 205) that it was found in 1787, and that a part of it, about a foot square, was laid open. It is added that very little notice was taken of it, and it was soon forgotten. We commenced the excavations, as stated above, at the room No. 12 on the plan. Nothing was found in this room except two floor tiles and many small pieces of wall plaster and broken tiles. Having dealt with several other of the rooms, Sir John went on to say that, in consequence of the receipt of the second anonymous letter, we commenced work in the garden, and rooms 7, 8, and 9 were disclosed. The division numbered 10 has not been cleared out, but in tracing the eastern wall the square well-like place was found, and in clearing this out we found the Roman arch, which is two feet wide and 2ft. 7in. to the spring. From this arch flues extend to room No. 9, No. 6, in the court-yard, has long been known. Some years ago, in making a drain, there was found, about a three or four feet below the surface in the rick-yard, a remarkable stone, a drawing of which, made by Miss Crossman, I now exhibit. It was firmly set upon masonry, apparently as a base of something. This led to the partially opening up of rooms 21, 22, and 23. Further excavations to some extent were made towards the site of the stone. The ground was found to be much broken, but no foundations were discovered. It must be borne in mind that, with one exception, the rough foundations of the walls only have been found, and foundations of the walls have been obliterated. Hence we do not find any doorways, either for entrance to the building or for communications from room to room. The foundations would of course be continued underneath the thresholds of the doors. The only exception, to which I have alluded, is on the north-west angle of the room numbered 12, in the cow-barn, where, upon the foundations, rests a fragment of Roman walling, of courses of masonry about a foot or 18 inches, extending about 20ft. The relics found have been very few and imperfect. A minute description of all that has been found in the various rooms was then given, the principal of which are:—Room II., which is paved with mosaic pavement arranged in the well-known fytot pattern, made of 2-inch tesserae of blue and white lias, with a border on the two longer sides about 12 inches wide—a grayish white tessera from 1 to 1½ inches square. Room III. The pavement of this is much broken, but is very chaste and good. In the south angle of this room was found loose the base of a column, also the fragments of a vase of rather fine grey ware. Room VI. This floor is somewhat lower than those in the rooms we have treated of; a portion of it has long been opened. It was found in cutting a drain leading from the back of the east part of the dwelling-house and the little yard adjoining the cowhouse. An old inhabitant had given information that in this yard at one time a big square pit, walled up on each side, was found. It is very desirable that this spot should be carefully excavated, as it might throw much light on the arrangements of the building. Room VII. On the outside of the north wall, at a foot distant, is a second wall, at the south end of which is a square block of freestone, rebated as if for a doorway. The wall probably belonged to some further buildings on that side. In the room itself there appears in the north wall a recessed bench or seat, and external to the wall on the east side is laid a flat stone, 7ft. by 5ft., the use of which I am unable to state. There is no trace of flooring in this room. Room VIII. is paved with flagstones. The objects found therein are of the same character as found in Room VII. In these rooms two Nuremberg tokens were found. These tokens are very common. Room IX. is in the one supposed to be mentioned by Mr. Smith's anonymous correspondent, and these rooms were discovered by means of that writer's letters. The pavement is a very beautiful one, but it has given way and sunk in several places, in consequence of the falling in of the flues underneath it, which lead from No. X., and radiate under the floor of this room. No objects of interest were found in this room save some pieces of painted plaster. No. X. This space has not been explored, with the exception of the chamber marked A on the plan, which is 4ft. by 5ft., and 3ft. 6in. deep. On the north side is the archway already mentioned. This was closed by a thin flat stone, cut to fit closely the opening, and lying back at an angle of about 37°. In clearing out the chamber brass Roman coin of Carausius was found. Room XXIII. This is a long corridor reaching at least 50ft. The pavement is of the fytot pattern, beautifully arranged, precisely like that in Room II., and extends in a tolerably complete condition about 30ft., and the remaining 20ft. has small saucers of tesserae insitu, but the pavement is broken up, and the tesserae with the soil. We have not found any wall this chamber at the east end, and the walls bounding the pavement are to a great extent destroyed. It might have been much better preserved, if the length of the pavement, on the south side, five rough feet in a radiating manner, forming an arch, as if intended to support something over the pavement. About twenty-five or thirty feet from the north side of the pavement I found the remains of a wall, which I believe good results by further excavations—when the mow the ground on that spot, and also of the rick-yard on the north side of the that lying between the present excavation and the dwelling-house. In consequence of the name of the society, tendered my grateful thanks to the lord of the manor (Mr. George Crossman, the manager of the manor); to Mr. George Crossman, the secretary of the pavements; to Mr. Judge, of the office of Works, for his excellent plans; to Mr. George Pullin, the bailiff of the manor, for his ready help; and last, but by no means least, to Mr. Richard Smith, the intelligent and intelligent gentleman, who has taken the great interest he has had in the work of excavation, and also for the care and convenience occasioned by his farm yard, and also for the careful men in the work of excavation, in which in his (Sir John's) absence he has invited any of the gentlemen interested in the discovery, to offer a proposition (Wrighton) said he visited the manor alluded to by Sir John. He is a public-spirited man, and a valuable find of the opening up of the ground, which produces great results. He had and he thought more had been to a right to expect. A great deal in an able, masterly way. He is to do with the excavations in the town, and he could say judgment had been shown, search would be further prosecuted that great results would follow of the recent discovery of a hoard of Roman coins, the high testimony to the Cornish manor, Mr. Pigott, who had the expense of the excavation and great preservation of the remains. Great Roman coins had been discovered, and further investigations were being made.
