~~THE COLLEGE~~
~~READING~~

My dear Spencer,

Your interesting letter reached me last winter soon after my return from Africa, and, as you may imagine, struck many responsive chords. About the Empire and the bush you wrote precisely the feelings with which I came home. On the whole, a camp by a stream a hundred miles from the nearest white man must take one equally far from Oxford, whether it be in Australia or Africa. And there are some striking similarities in those two particular continents. Africa, also, has "very-leaved scrub" such as you describe - it is of Arctic type - and it has a long rolling plain with no water.

The chief differences, I suppose, are in the fact numbers of big mammals, the difficulties with grain bills and the human portage. By the way you have a Kenya professor of mine in your new colleague, Gregory. We are expecting him home this Autumn to make Antarctic preparations.

All that you tell me of your work in Greenland sounds most fascinating. I had heard

28 something of it from Jan Kratoch.
~~It~~ I was dining with him the other night and he described you as the big scientific man (of the Kratoch type) in Antarctica.

Although my time is spent here, my work has ~~had~~ been out of the East. In '32 I was sent to found a College at Reading, which I am still working from.
Oxford. It has now a staff of 40 and is affiliated to the University here. The building of it has given me a delightful partnership with a little group of men embarked in the same boat - for just mixed enterprise.
And now the University has handed over to me the old Admiral's Building - or rather the greater part of it, and has given me ~~the~~ an assistant and two lecturers for my geographical work here. Pioneering in Oxford is slower work than with you, but I hope for results.

Did you know Morrison, the Times correspondent at Peking? He was a Melbourne man. I sat vis-a-vis with him from Aden to Marseilles last Autumn and found him an excellent companion. I last heard from him from Colombo, when he was on his way <sup>back</sup> to Peking via Melbourne. From our latest news I suppose he and the rest of the Europeans must be taken as dead. You Australians ought to be as deeply interested in China as in S. Africa.

May I congratulate you with all my heart on your F.R.S. and, though it has been out a long time now, on Your book on the Australian natives.

Many thanks for the papers about the Horn expedition. I sent you a paper of mine on the Kenya expedition by way of acknowledgment.

Bourne has been away from Oxford of late, serving with his Militia, which is embodied in Ireland. Selator was home from the Cape a short time ago, but I missed him as I did you. His father comes to see ~~us~~ us here occasionally & gives me flourishing accounts of him. Waggott - do you remember him? - is a Cortley Father - a curious fact for a first in Animal Morphology. But he is a very interesting man - knew Romanes very intimately - and has missionised at the Cape. Jackson (Hatchett) is Acland's successor at the Ratcliffe Library - he is an odd fellow.

Old Acland is evidently quite broken. He is still driven about Oxford - a mere skeleton and quite shrivelled, supported on cushions & by a nurse.

If you come to England, let me know beforehand. We shall be delighted to welcome you. Eighteen months ago, I ~~sent~~ ~~you~~ searched for you everywhere on behalf of the Education Department, but you had just started for Melbourne. Professor Morris writes that he showed you a letter from me last spring, so you know the possibility of my coming your way on the globe.

Yours very sincerely

J. Mackinder

P.S. Someone told me the other day that they had found your and my names together in a Black Forest hotel book!
