

The University of Sydney

2 January 1827.

Dear Sir Baldwin,

Thank you for your letter of Dec 27th. I am greatly interested to hear the result of the examination of hair which is, of course, what one would have been inclined to expect.

As to the spelling of native words in your new book I most strongly recommend retaining the same spelling that you used before.

No one will make any criticism of that and on the contrary some might criticise if you changed.

The fact that I sometimes use a spelling different from yours is not in any way a criticism of your procedure.

Some of us are trying to introduce, as far as possible, a universal phonetic spelling for native languages generally and I have therefore adopted as far as I can a system similar to that of Father Schmidt and that used by Hendry and his school for African languages. In this system a is used for the vowel in 'full' or with a diacritical, for that in 'fool'.
The 'aranda' vowel in Aranda seems to me to be the one best in oral or English and as 'lout' and this I should write in a phonetic transcription as ə, making the word aränta or arända.

But in many of the dialects marks have to be omitted; and one nearly only in the proper place in the and dictionary or glossaries. As the t or d may even disappear has been that it is exceedingly difficult to distinguish the vowels from the various consonants in Australian languages or that it does not really matter very much which one uses in any particular instance. Amongst the various spellings of the name of the Arunta I found only two that need be considered and of these the form Aranda was meant to run over as one option and so I fell into the habit of using that form. I think that or the whole I will prefer the ə in doing this. But I would at the same time strongly recommend you to keep to your old spelling, which is all we know as yet.

and as being quite as accurate or your system as any other.

I think exactly the same thing applies to such words as churinga and alchera. No one will or can criticism these spellings which have found their way from your books into a vast number of others.

The spelling of Australian languages has been chaotic in the extreme.
All that is required of any ethnologist is that he should spell consistently and explain to his readers the phonetic value of the letters and signs he uses. I hope that some day, when dictionaries and texts in native languages are concerned, it may be possible to introduce a scientific phonetic system and attain uniformity and exactness. But till this has been done there is no standard or canon.

The University of Sydney.

I have heard from Sidney Ray and he does not seem inclined to come and take up the study of an Australian language, but expresses a willingness to consider a definite offer to come and carry further his work on the Papuan and Melanesian languages.

I hear that the Australian National Research Council has nominated you as its representative on an Advisory Committee on Anthropology in connection with the work here. It has been suggested that a meeting of this committee should be held during the second week of February. I hope that you will be free to attend at that time.

going to get away and as I much hardly tell you that I shall look forward eagerly to your return and suppose you will have account of the Arrears. regards with kind regards and best wishes. And with my very respected Yrs sincerely yours John R. Redcliff Brown and I now leave you introducing at an early interview a young man who is no other than Mr. John R.

Redcliff Brown
who has had a long time with me
and he has done
a great deal of work for me and I am very glad to have him here to help me up with