liberty also of asking him if he will part with them at the price to send them to you to see about the condition, & that I should leave it to your judgment.
Do you mind acting as a referee:
if he won't part with them at that price & if they are really in good condition I would go to £2 a piece but don't want to.

Judging by the look of your last ones the breeding season is over. Hang the beasts they must breed about two or three months before the time at which you sent me down your celebrated female. I am hoping that we will be able to work the beast out in Australia before the wily German gets him & thanks to your material I believe that we will.

Leucuroa is the thing I am keenest after just now.

It is a strange thing that they don't seem to get any of that by Jotted Gaudier.

French tell me that he is still distinctly light & elevating literature over the Central region. He has been on the mill bust over the Baron's (i.e. the one only Baron - von Miller) 70th birthday.

The last performance of this celebrated individual is as follows.

A leading medical man & his wife go to see the Baron to congratulate him:
the Fop coat is hung up on the only vacant peg.

Enter another distinguished visitor who places his Fop coat on the peg for me. The lady & gentleman go but can't find the coat. The Baron in great distress suggests that 'overcome with the most acerbic's awakened with the extraordinary kindness of his friends' he had probably removed the coat in a fit of abstraction taken it to his own room.

Accordingly he plunges into the bath in the dark & returns in fumph.

Exit the distinguished medico with his wife the former 'why carrying the coat in his arm.' Why my dear what have you got 'perhaps the lady & the medico find that he has a pair of the barons most ancient & odiferous Breeches: each says the Baron, 'madame is married so perhaps it will not quatter much!

Someday I trust you will see the Baron: he is a good sound to Mulbourn.
However I must stop & write a few lines to Corle.

Yours very sincerely

Waldwin Spencer.

Kind regards to Jile. Has he got another snake yet. That one is still relyatid to a special chamber.
