

Please give my love to Emily I will write her very soon.

(46)
Nov. 25. 83.

Dear Howard

We are in the midst of a wet Sunday which is an event not much appreciated here especially by those such as myself who look forward to it as a day on which to be out in the fresh air a little. I am much looking forward to this term coming to an end for though perfectly well in general health I feel rather muddled & have acquired the power of rapidly forgetting anything I read.

Of course you will have heard of poor Hornby missing his London Exam.
I can't understand it except on the ground that he has got 'stale' through over-reading which is most probably the real ^{cause} of things. I think if he could get a change for a little & the chance of pulling himself together again & then starting once more that he would probably be all right. It will be very depressing to him I fear but I don't think away people know that he was in for it ~~get~~ which is a good thing. We always used to credit him with a very fair power of getting up Exam. work & I believe he has it notwithstanding these failures. He is a kind of fellow who gets 'sluggish' & heavy if he does not get exercise.

Just now we are having two or three subjects occupying attention here & I wish that my time were free so as to take more interest in them. In the first place 'virescentia' is on: there is a somewhat strong opposition to any of it under any form (of course the very name of 'intersection' rather begs the question) being carried on in any 'varsity' buildings. There is a debate on at the Union next Thursday: a Balliol man moves that the house disapproves of its being practised in any University buildings - Macquiden will open the opposition to him + there will probably be a good debate. For some things I wish that I had begun speaking at the Union but to do anything there takes up too much time especially as I am trying to get through my course in a year less than the usual time.

Besides this the great subject of the day

2)

46

here or the one which is going to be the great one is the social question — what is to be done with
+ for the lower classes.

Oxford seems to be once more coming to the front + though at present it is merely being talked about in every college + lectured about we shall have before long some great movement + the best of it is that it is coming in our time + that we shall be able to do our share in the work. Have you seen anything of what is called the "University Settlements" idea. This is in the main that 'Vandy men (perhaps belonging to one college or to various colleges) should form a kind of settlement that is that a place should be kept in some poor part of one of our great towns such as the East End of London with lecture & class rooms that it should be under the charge of some older man & should be made the centre of work of various kinds: 'Vandy men would be the workers not permanent ones

46
necessarily but the aim would be for them to undertake for a longer or shorter time work in which they were fitted - such things as teaching or lecturing or acting or singing or almost anything. They would go about & amongst the people & try to get to understand them & their needs & if possible to give them in their lives what Matthew Arnold would call "Sweetness & light". It is really a modified form of Socialism & is indeed almost Spinoza's that name here. Of course such a scheme as this would have to be much modified before being made practically useful but the very fact of such things being discussed as earnestly as they are shows the deep interest that is being awakened in them & that we shall yet see Oxford at the head of a new & this time a social movement. To a certain extent it must be unconnected with what would ordinarily be called 'religious' object & might perhaps on this ground meet with opposition from many though of course it would really be anything but opposed to real religion: at all events it would be distinctly unsectarian as its leaders are & would be most probably outside the church that is held no position in this.

I find that my time is up as I have to read in chapel this evening so must close at once.
In friend,
W.B.S.