Dear Aschmole,

The Crannog was found by a Mr Donnelly, a painter. The stones like Chasingas I have not seen. But, at the Museum here, are others of the sort, found at Orambuie, in Dumfriesshire, near the Crannog. These, I have standing near, he under suspicion, first as unique and unparallelled, next because some of the markings seem fresh, and have "perpendicular sides"

( not )

While, in other Drum Circle examples, the markings have every sign of antiquity.

Others are in this sandstone, and have not only cup marks, but too, incised lines in

The slate stone, ~~with~~ suspension hole and all, is just a Churinga. There are seven the "part" at Drum Circle, I am trying to get rubbings of the Churingas in the Cranney from Mr. Drnelly.
I have told him, generally, that a book with parallel usage objects being prepared.

It is not in nature that casual finders should take Cummings and deposit them in undeniably archaic sites. So I think the thing looks promising. So far, and I send the note as so Spencer may be interested. Of course he ought, if possible, to see the actual objects.

The official antiquaries will scout it, because they did not find it out, as they scouted Ogami de

Yours very truly
