Many thanks for Spencer's proof, rec'd. up to p. 544; may I have the remainder.

I have just come across something odd. The Chunging, or tribal italics (pp 146-149)
are paralleled by many similar objects just found in a crannog on the Clyde, whereas in western metal work was pottery. There stories

are puzzling the antiquaries, who never heard of Churinga, and I am inclined to think that Australian

note takes the water problem as to and these objects mean. I wonder if "

note could be
added at the end,

with a see
sample of a Clyde Churinga? Low
Lorne, who happened
to look in just now.

told me of the Clyde find, and believed the very

new theory, any way.

Yours very truly
A Lang
