General Pitt Rivers, F.R.S.
Rushmore, Salisbury.

Sir,

In reference to the atlas which is being bound in two volumes. The binder has been here to ask whether it is really intended to have the two edges of every map strengthened with canvas, because the effect would be ~~to render~~ thickness at back and front, looseness in the middle, and clumsiness in general appearance.

The stock copies of this atlas have only the indented edge strengthened - 36 thicknesses of canvas; whereas if the ninety maps have their two edges strengthened, there will be of course, 180 thicknesses of canvas. Will you please have the order confirmed, and oblige.

I am, Sir,

Yours obediently,

Sir,

The binder writes about the London Atlas, that it will be impossible to gild the front edge if only the nicks are strengthened. He suggests using a very thin lining all the way down <sup>the</sup> each edge so that the atlas would look fairly well, and the hollow in the middle be not so noticeable.

Shall the latter mode be adopted?
