Dear General

Many thanks for your 'Short guide'. It is a very pleasant guide to my memory as I go over again with its help that very pleasant and instructive day you let me spend with you

Believe me, very truly yours

N. Haydarulige

thing of the profanum vulgus ... arcs about it I think the distribution of the material too is very curious the bigger stuff outside and very small stuff inside i.e. moves to the concave side of the vallum

And they tell me that they found an older and more shallow vallum ~~at~~ under the big one - pointing to two epodes in the structure.

I must cut through my bank at Ringbury (in Pooton near here) - but must get your advice about it. It has the ditch inside

Some three or four years ago, when we went over all the ground I have now been going through again in the guide, and finished up at the very interesting works at the Bokerly Dyke. I wish you could take Avebury in hand

The cutting they have just made there is very narrow but suffices to show to what a depth the ditch formerly went and how steep it was!

It must have been meant for more than a mere means of forming a Vallum for an amphitheatre to look on from.
It must have had some.
