LINDERTIS,
KIRRIEMUIR.
N.B.

Dear Augustus

It has suddenly dawned upon me the muddle I got into, for which you must have thought me a literal descendant of Ananias, when I told you I should have to pay 120 or 30 o/o to insure my life. I did not see what I had said. Of course I meant to say per thousand, instead of per cent, but I got into a muddle about it, and did not understand what I had said. The actual sum I should have to pay is £109.5.0 per thousand, but even that is too much for me to afford.

Will you tell Douglas from me that Hatfield, Burleigh and Longst were all three built by the same architect, "John of Padua" whose real name was Throspe.

I suppose by this time that you are returning from the British Association and hope you are having better weather than we are here; nothing but rain and quan-tities of hay still out.

My wife is in Holland or she would join with me in best remembrances to Mrs Pitt Rivers.

Yours sincerely
Carr. Munro
