

Dorchester thro' Bridport to Axminster (? Colyford)

We found the bed of the road to be of sea pebbles at a depth of about 14 to 20 inches: but nothing of any date turned up except a glass seal off a bottle dated last century: a round bit of lead (near the carpenter's) four broad horse shoes near an old blacksmith's forge.
& a few modern bones at one spot: no coins at all, nor any pottery.

Yrs faithfully C.V. Goddard.

P.S. I have lately been informed that about 20 yrs ago
found an oak tree 18 inches wide, in the the ruins were, in the they beat it up. I have found a canoe dug out of about 10 feet long & in the dry pond &
Chideock Castle.
near for fire wood.

I introduced by your notice "Blakey's Boot Protectors", as you were exhibiting the ancient sandal cleats - I enclose another sample which I have lately come across
