

Britain, as I am a member of the London Library for the present year, & can get what I want.

During the coming summer I am thinking of again making your district a scene of many of the excursions that a roving spirit & a love of fresh, pure air prompts me to, as I have an idea that it is well that many of us of a younger generation should have an good acquaintance with your remarkable work.

Are any more excursions being undertaken?

I remain, Sir,

yours obediently

My dear Sir

Your manuscript relative duty came to hand, tho' I am no hurry for its return, & if there be any discreet person to whom a sight of it might impart a better knowledge or fuller appreciation of your interesting district, he is welcome.

Yet when it is returned I should be very interested to know your opinion as to how I used my faculty of observation, & if I saw & noted things in a manner that you intended them to be noted by a <sup>simple</sup> observant visitor.

My more immediate object of writing however is to ask you if you could be so kind as to mention any books one should read so as to acquire a sound general knowledge of man - particularly
