

a colony from Clermont.

If you are to have a generic name, I think the best is the name of the place to which we can ultimately trace the manufacture:

I don't object to calling all porcelain, china, or to calling English faience

English delft; but I do object to calling all shells cockles

& mussels, & fixing the name Sauvies to ware that has absolutely nothing to do with the

Sauvies

My dear General.

Many thanks

for your interesting letter.

Since I wrote you before, I have spent an evening at Frank's, as he wanted to show me a famous Gold Cup.

about which he will not don't speak to you.

We also had a talk about

Sacian Ware, on which subject I do not agree with either Frazer or Roade. I do not think there is the slightest evidence that ware, in the best resembling what we call Sacian, was ever made at Sarnos, & I think the name has arisen from a misunderstanding in a passage of Pliny. How we do know that ware of a similar, ^{though} not of the same kind, was made at Corintum.

Fragments, moulds, & I believe diggers, have been found at Arezzo. This ware is red, is moulded, & although lighter, is generically the same as the pieces which come from Clermont, & of which I got several specimens there.
& I have no doubt myself, that the potters of Clermont were a colony from Arezzo or from Corintum, just as the Rhine potters were

(L2528)

& I don't follow Fraude's illustration about Majolica, which was so called because the original pieces came from Majorca.
The saddles & stirrups which I spoke to you about were in a warehouse in the city. & when I got your letter, I told them to divide the collection in two,
one half of it being for myself. The other half I told them to put into a box, carefully packed,

& to leave them at your home - I thought they were all good & beautiful specimens of books & I am sure they all belonged to Dennis. I told them to look them all to me.
You must not think there is the smallest obligation for you to take them unless they quite suit you. as I believe Hilton Price is anxious for some & would have them & if not, these people quite understand they are to take them back again -

With our very kind regards to you all,

yours very truly
