In the letter of Mr Storey in the Times of yesterday it is suggested that the ~~collections~~^{collections} in the British Museum can be made available for public instruction by means of lectures. No doubt lectures are important and I find no fault with any conclusion that leads to ~~the~~^{the} ~~Museum as a means of public instruction~~ or for use the Museum for public instruction in general. But the suggestion that I venture to make in my address to the Antiquary Society at ~~the~~ Bath in last year's ~~meeting~~^{meeting} at the British Museum. One ~~thing~~^{thing} has been made available for ~~the~~^{the} ~~purpose~~ to a great extent for the instruction of visitors. It has a different function ~~to~~^{purpose}. Since it has ~~been~~^{been}
