Dear General Pitt Rivers

Would you have any objections to my reproducing a small illustration of your drawing of the woodcut village from your work on it?
I gave a lecture at the Royal Institution last Spring while the Editor of 'Nature' is desirous of publishing with illustrations in "Nature". An illustration of British villages would be a great improvement to it. Of course the source would be acknowledged and attention called to your works.

I have been at Parliament Hill today to see the work of excavation of the barrow going on there under Mr. Rees. It has unfortunately proved a failure so far, nothing having been found, not even the trace of an interment of any kind, but there are traces through the barrow of cremation though not of animal matter.

Yours sincerely
J. G. Garson
